Austin Homeowners Design with Hakatai Glass Tiles

For Immediate Release: Hakatai mosaic glass tiles have earned a loyal following with architects and interior designers in Austin, Texas, the ameliorating little city that seems to reinvent itself with the times. In recent years the Texas capital has been experiencing a major surge in renovations as mid-century homes seeking to contemporize yet retain the charm and identity of the era turn to Hakatai glass mosaic tiles for a modern accent that fits.

As a professional photographer, “Austinite” Casey Maddeaux has developed a sharp eye and feel for design in her years spent capturing the uniqueness that is Austin through the lens of a camera. Her familiarity with Hakatai glass mosaic tiles in design comes from her experience in shooting high-end hospitality, restaurant and residential settings in Central Texas and well beyond. When it came time for the proprietor of Casey Woods Photography and her husband to remodel the master bath of their 1940s bungalow-style residence, the design called for the Ashland e-series of recycled content mosaic glass tiles from Hakatai.

The Austin couple designed a beautiful new modern space for the master bath and featured the elegant, calming appeal of Cloud White in the Ashland-e series of glass mosaic tiles from Hakatai. Casey and her husband Scott were pleased to find a high-design collection of glass mosaics with recycled content and used the Ashland-e series that's been produced with up to 70 percent recycled content diverted from the waste stream for a breathtaking drop-in tub surround enclosure, the shower walls and floor, as well as the backsplash. The subtle, clean and calming Cloud White glass mosaic tiles from the Ashland-e series' with hand-made characteristics and natural color style variations sparkle in the natural sunlight streaming in through the horizontal window placed along the tub.

"The home is a vintage bungalow from the mid to late 1940s," said Maddeaux. "My husband and I made the decision to renovate the bath and create a more modern space. We had seen Hakatai products in other homes and were excited about the recycled content in the Ashland-e tiles. We loved the color Cloud White because it has a slight variation in color tones and it gives a peaceful, serene feeling to the room."
